

Clinical Trials Matter

Clinical trials are essential to the progress of health care. All treatments and interventions used today are the result of past successful clinical trials.

Providing the option to participate in a clinical trial benefits not only our patients but also future generations. By conducting and participating in cancer clinical trials, all of us — our oncologists, patients, and research team -- are directly contributing to the advancement of cancer care. Without clinical trials, we would not move forward with new treatments and interventions in the effort to find a cure for cancer.
